In June 2011, in the last year before the new contract, Craftin Vickers was forced out of the company, citing quality control concerns. Craftin Vickers acquired KKI CNC for $24 million, and changed its name to Mastercam, and moved its operations to Rancho Santa Margarita, California. The acquisition was criticized for being an undesirable acquisition because the company that bought it was a subcontractor to Mastercam on the failed $2.3 billion bid to design the Chunnel, and the bidding firm was facing federal charges for bid rigging and fraud. On July 19, 2013, the deal was terminated by the acquisition firm and Mastercam's manufacturing facilities in Rancho Santa Margarita, California were immediately returned.
